

ACQUITS RICH MAN ACCUSED BY WOMAN

Witnesses to Abraham Leipzig's
Worth Not Needed to Refute
Theft Charge.

ATTORNEY SHOWS AN ALIBI

Weeps as He Is Freed in Harlem
—May Sue Policeman for False Arrest.

Abraham Leipzig, a retired business man, worth $500,000, who lives at the Manhattan Square Hotel, was freed in Harlem police court yesterday by Magistrate Peter Barlow after Mrs. Pearl Weinreb, wife of Harry Weinreb, a tailor, had accused him of robbing her of $100 in a West 118th street hallway.

The collection of witnesses to Mr. Leipzig's character were not called. Herman Frohman, owner of the Manhattan Square Hotel; Theodore Oelsheimer, president of the Metropolitan Bank; Hyman Stern and Isaac Harlem, pawnbrokers and realty men; Melchior Ulmer, of Lincoln & Ulmer, cigars; Felix Dincuss, who makes paper and twine, and Monash Essig, who lives at the Manhattan Square, were ready to testify to Mr. Leipzig's worth.

Mrs. Weinreb said that Mr. Leipzig, whom she first met in March while looking for a flat, had come up to her in West 118th street on May 14, between 1 and 2 o'clock P. M., and asked her for $100 with which to buy jewelry of another man who was not known to her. Mrs. Weinreb said she didn't have $100, though it was folded in her dress. She said that Leipzig pushed her into a doorway and took the money from her dress, stuffed a brass watch and glass earrings into her hand and ran down the street after the stranger. She went home and told her oldest child, a daughter.

This story was repeated many times, to a policeman, to deputy assistant district attorneys in two police courts and finally to Magistrate Barlow. After the Magistrate had heard it, Samuel J. Jacobs, of Jacobs & Livingston, lawyers at 132 Nassau street, who is Mr. Leipzig's adviser in matters of money as well as law, took the stand.

He told Judge Barlow that on May 14 from 1 to 3 o'clock Mr. Leipzig was in his office in Nassau street closing up details of three mortgages for $18,000 which were executed the next day. Mr. Jacobs showed the record of the mortgages in a book he had brought with him, and Judge Barlow said:

"Mr. Leipzig is discharged."

Mr. Leipzig, who is 58, got outside the court room and then his feelings were too much for him. Tears ran down his cheeks and it wasn't until he got back to his home in the hotel that he was able to talk. Then he said:

"I have been honorably exonerated by the court. I can't say any more. As to any further steps I may take you will have to ask Mr. Jacobs."

Mr. Jacobs when he got back to his office showed records of mortgages owned by Mr. Leipzig totalling $265,000. He wanted to know what incentive his client could have for stealing $100 from Mr. Weinreb or any one else.

"Mr. Leipzig will probably sue for false arrest," said Mr. Jacobs. "I cannot see how the lieutenant on the desk had the right to arrest my client on this woman's story after the policeman had taken her on Mr. Leipzig's charge that she had annoyed him by falsely charging him with theft."
